Returning for its fifth edition at Tate Modern's Turbine Hall, Offprint London will bring together around 170 independent and experimental publishers in the fields of contemporary art, photography and graphic design from around the world. Produced by Luma since 2015, Offprint is an itinerant project held periodically in London, Paris, Milan, and Arles for independent, experimental publishers working in the fields of contemporary art, photography, graphic design, architecture, humanities and visual culture.

Across the weekend, there will be a programme of book signings, talks and workshops, co-produced with Tate and Photoworks.

Photoworks will present a talks programme embracing chance where one speaker invites the next, and the next, creating a chain of speakers interlinked through professional or social connections. Talks will address broad topics in the visual arts and beyond, from music to architecture to photography.
